“There is some belief among investors that the Fed won’t cut rates until a sustained decline in inflation toward its 2 percent target is established,” said Kavan Choksi, business management and wealth consultant at KC Consulting. “While contradictory to the Fed’s projections, this would mean we wouldn’t see rate cuts until the end of Q4 2023 or early Q1 2024. Although the job market has remained strong, I wouldn’t be surprised if we enter a recession in 2023. In the event that this happens it’s unlikely the Fed will bail out the economy as it’d be viewed as counter to cooling inflation.”
